

Three ways to move through the same story

TRAVERSE / INTERCUT / TRANSFORM

Simple boards. Fixed background. Geist type. One dot language.

The voice

A clear point of view, stated plainly, then earned through evidence.

01 START WITH THE WORK

The first-person voice arrives only when origin or responsibility matters.

02 STATE THE POINT

Remove 'I think', 'I believe' and other throat-clearing.

03 MAKE TENSION CONCRETE

Use screens, systems, constraints, movement and interactions—not vague universals.

04 FOLLOW CLAIMS WITH PROOF

Name the method, discipline, client or consequence.

05 WRITE FOR THE EAR

Spatial statements are short. Prose remains natural when read aloud.

06 LEAVE THE SUBJECT OPEN

End with curiosity and direction, not mastery.

Refined story • 186 words

Digital experiences are often asked to make complicated things feel simple. But simple can become flat.

Clarity should make complexity understandable without removing what makes it human: context, character, movement and surprise.

I learned that first through graphic design. Type, image and rhythm can turn noise into meaning without erasing its energy.

That led me into products and services, where the same principle has to work at a larger scale: across users, systems, constraints and decisions.

Today I work across product design, experience design, art direction, motion, 3D and creative engineering. For organisations including the American Heart Association, S&P Global, Bentley, Yoti and SunExpress, the task has often been similar: find the structure, make it usable, then give it character.

Because structure is only the beginning. A perfect grid can still feel lifeless.

Prototypes let me test what brings it back: how an interaction responds, how motion guides attention, how a system holds together, and how a brand feels when someone actually uses it.

I want to keep making digital experiences with depth, clarity and a pulse. Experiences that make sense—and still leave room for curiosity.

The copy stays fixed. The orchestration changes.

01

TRAVERSE

The camera travels continuously through cloud, prose pause, grid and wave.

Most cinematic • strongest sense of journey

02

INTERCUT

Spatial sequences alternate with full editorial surfaces and embedded animations.

Most readable • strongest content rhythm

03

TRANSFORM

One dot field changes state continuously; the world moves more than the camera.

Most abstract • strongest material logic

TRAVERSE

The reader and the type move through the same spatial journey.

Continuous camera • cinematic depth • strongest sense of entering and emerging

FIND THE STRUCTURE. MAKE IT USABLE. GIVE IT CHARACTER.

AHA S&P GLOBAL BENTLEY YOTI SUNEXPRESS

Emerge into structure

The cloud resolves into a floor grid containing disciplines and client proof.

STRUCTURE IS ONLY THE BEGINNING.

Prototypes test how an interaction responds, how motion guides attention,
how a system holds together, and how a brand feels in use.

DEPTH. CLARITY. A PULSE.

I want to keep making digital experiences that make sense—and still leave room for curiosity.

INTERCUT

Spatial moments alternate with calm editorial pages and embedded motion studies.

Highest legibility • strongest prose rhythm • depth used only when it earns attention

COMPLICATED THINGS SHOULD FEEL SIMPLE.

01 / 08

Editorial entry

The opening line sits low on the page while the first cloud appears as a distant promise.

INTERCUT

02 / 08

Spatial statement

The cloud expands for one cinematic sentence rather than a continuous journey.

BUT SIMPLE CAN BECOME FLAT.

Clarity should make complexity understandable without removing what makes it human:

Recommended synthesis

Use TRAVERSE as the spine. Borrow the breathing room from INTERCUT and the state logic from TRANSFORM.

- TRAVERSE Camera journey and spatial headline moments
- INTERCUT Quiet prose, embedded animations and readable salience
- TRANSFORM Cloud → grid → pulse → wave as one material argument

Next: choose one opening, then storyboard the combined route at full-page scale.
