

About Me Storyboard v3

The background carries the spectacle.
The text carries the story.

The text layer follows five rules

Expression comes from depth, motion and timing
—not typographic noise.

Spatial moments use one centred title treatment. Reading moments use one left-aligned prose treatment. Both stay in sentence case, retain generous line spacing and sit on the same fixed background.

- ✓ Prose: left aligned, 40–52 character measure
- ✓ Titles: centred and moving only through depth
- ✓ Text: black; no coloured emphasis words
- ✓ Links and references: one consistent blue
- ✓ Dividers and outlines: only when they clarify structure

Enter complexity

Centred titles travel through a dense point field.

Pause and explain

Left-aligned prose introduces trajectory, practice and proof.

Structure comes alive

The grid, pulse and artefacts complete the argument.

01 — Enter the field

Spatial title

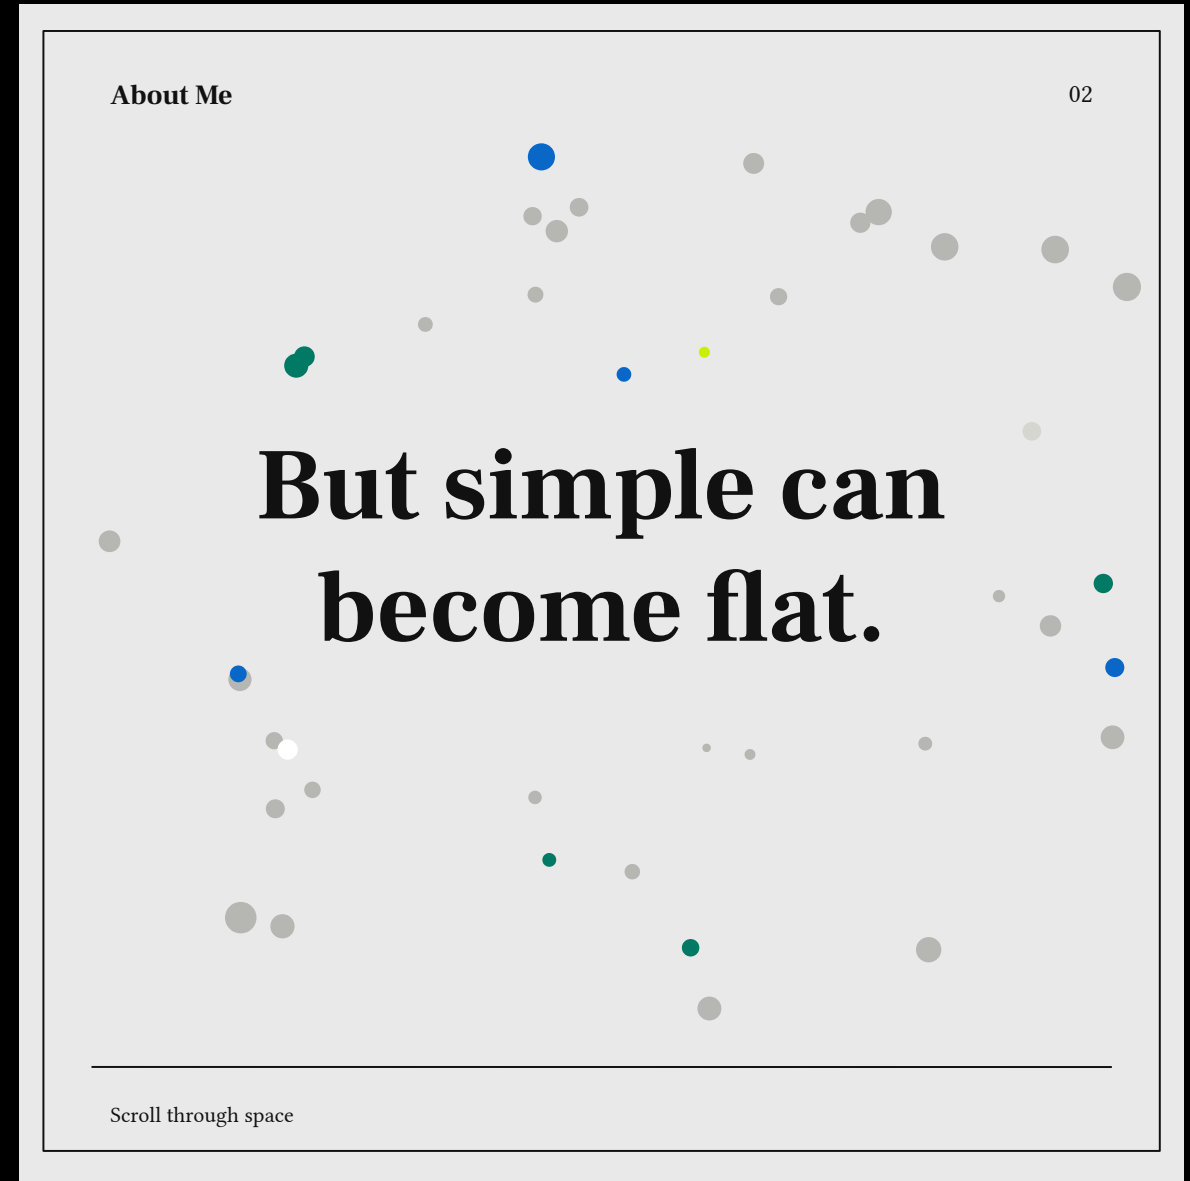

The sentence reaches a calm reading plane while the cloud moves behind it. The text does not rotate, scatter or change colour.

02 — The complication

Spatial title

A shorter sentence can travel closer to the viewer. It remains sentence case and centre aligned; depth supplies the emphasis.

03 — State the principle

Spatial title

The camera briefly stabilises inside the cloud. One concise title holds in the centre before the experience moves into prose.

04 — First reading pause

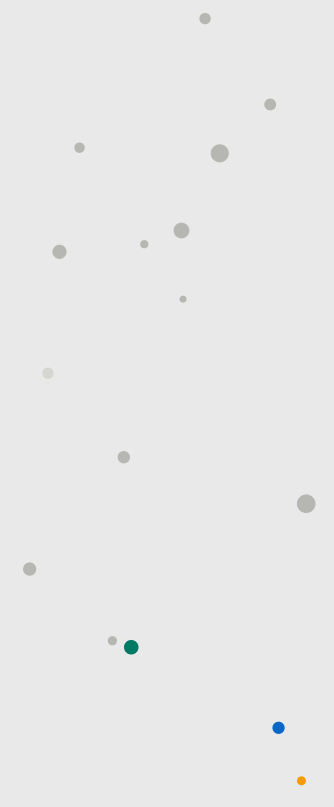

Prose

The environment recedes. A large left-aligned paragraph reveals line by line at one consistent threshold; the reading measure stays narrow.

About Me

04

Clarity should make complexity understandable without removing what makes it human: context, character, movement and surprise.

A decorative graphic consisting of approximately 15 small dots of varying sizes and colors (gray, teal, blue, orange) scattered in a loose, upward-sloping pattern along the right margin of the page.

05 — Graphic design origin

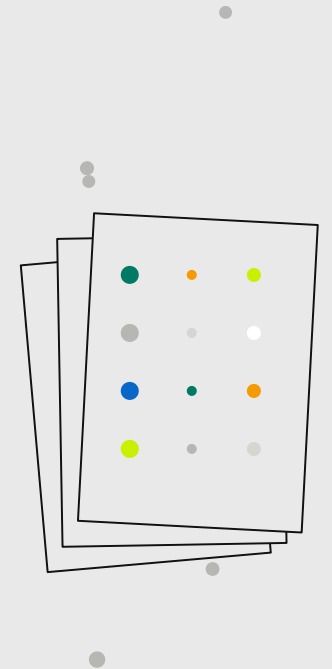

Prose + artefact

The biography begins only after the principle is clear. A poster stack appears beside the sentence as direct evidence, not decoration.

About Me

05

I learned that first through graphic design. Type, image and rhythm can turn noise into meaning without erasing its energy.

06 — The work scales up

Prose + outline list

A single outlined list gives the longer sentence structure. The boxes support scanning without turning the page into a card grid.

07 — Structure appears

Spatial title

The cloud begins to align into a field. The title stays optically still while the material behind it performs the transition.

08 — Structure becomes useful

Spatial title

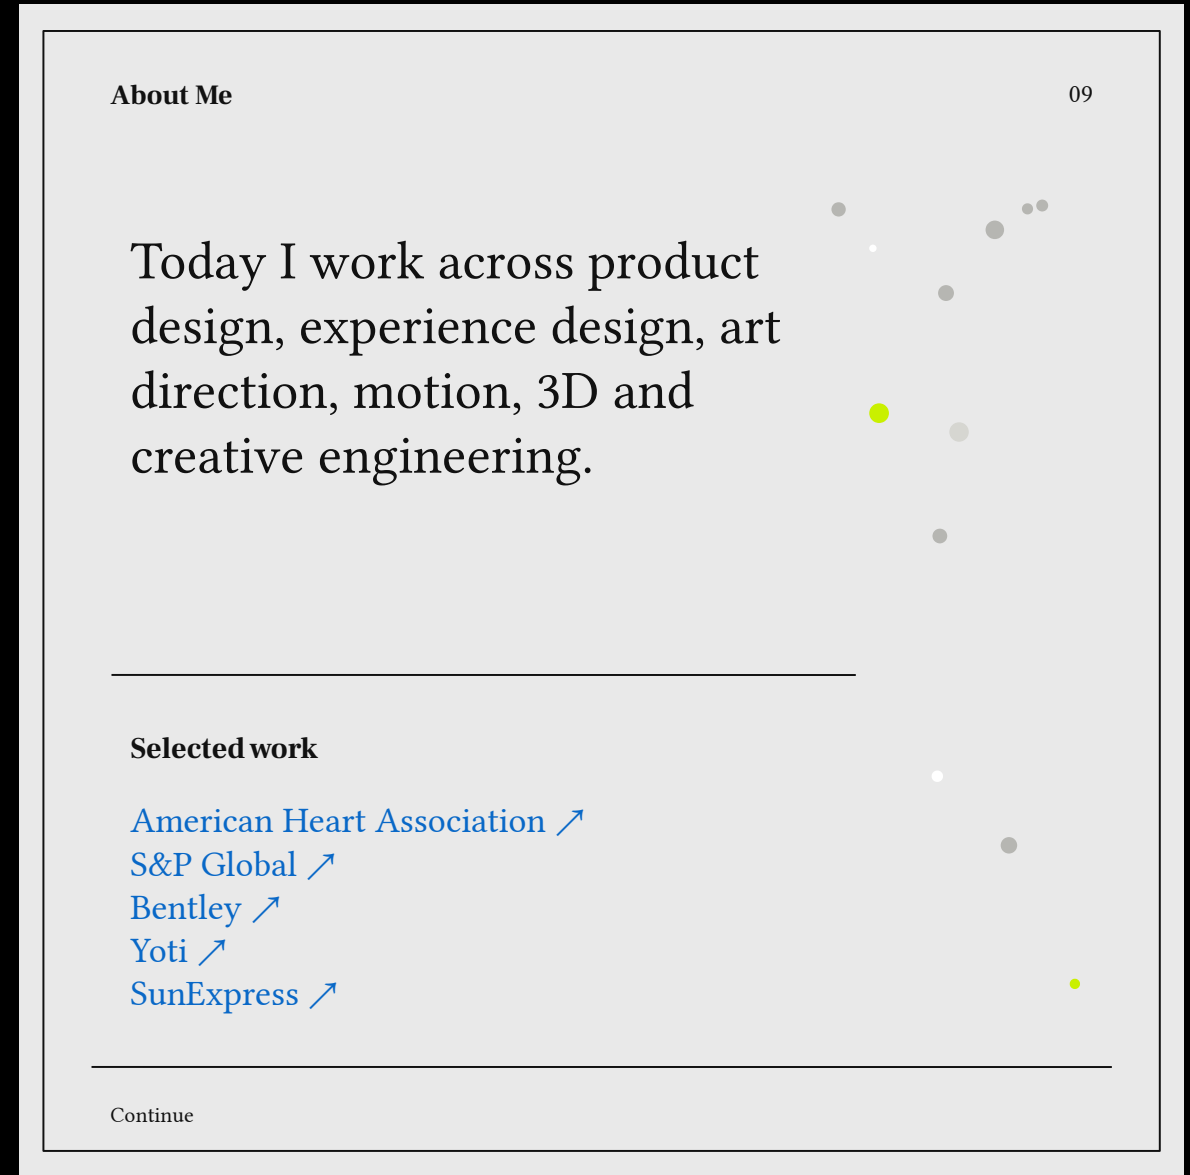

The point field is now ordered. A second short title advances the argument without adding another typographic treatment.

09 — Practice and proof

Prose + references

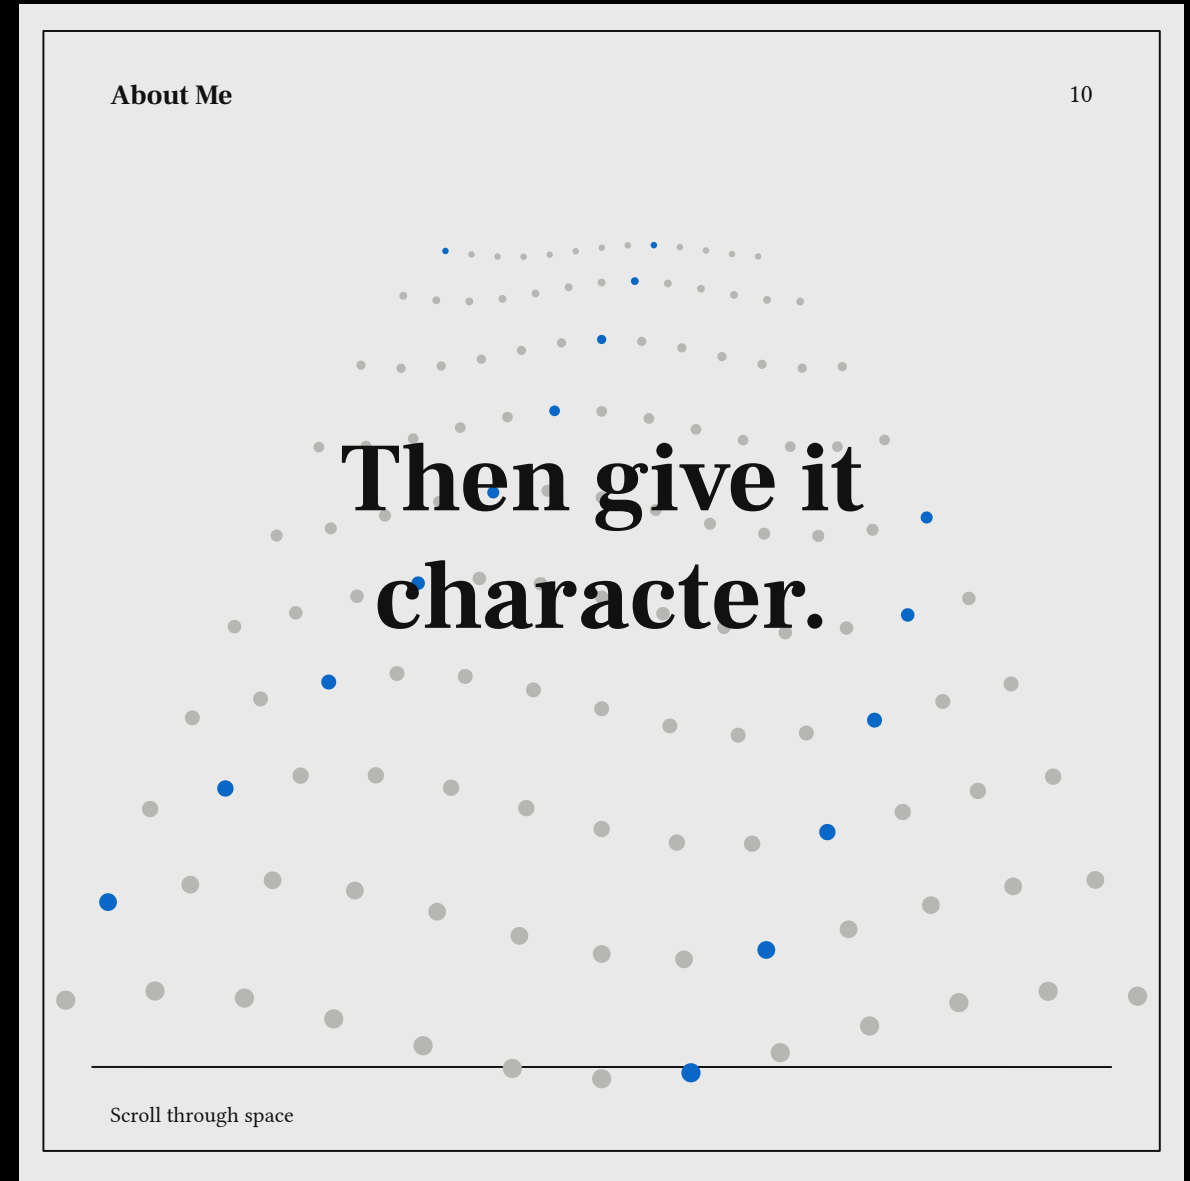

The disciplines are stated plainly. Client names use one consistent blue because they behave as references; no other words are coloured.

10 — Character returns

Spatial title

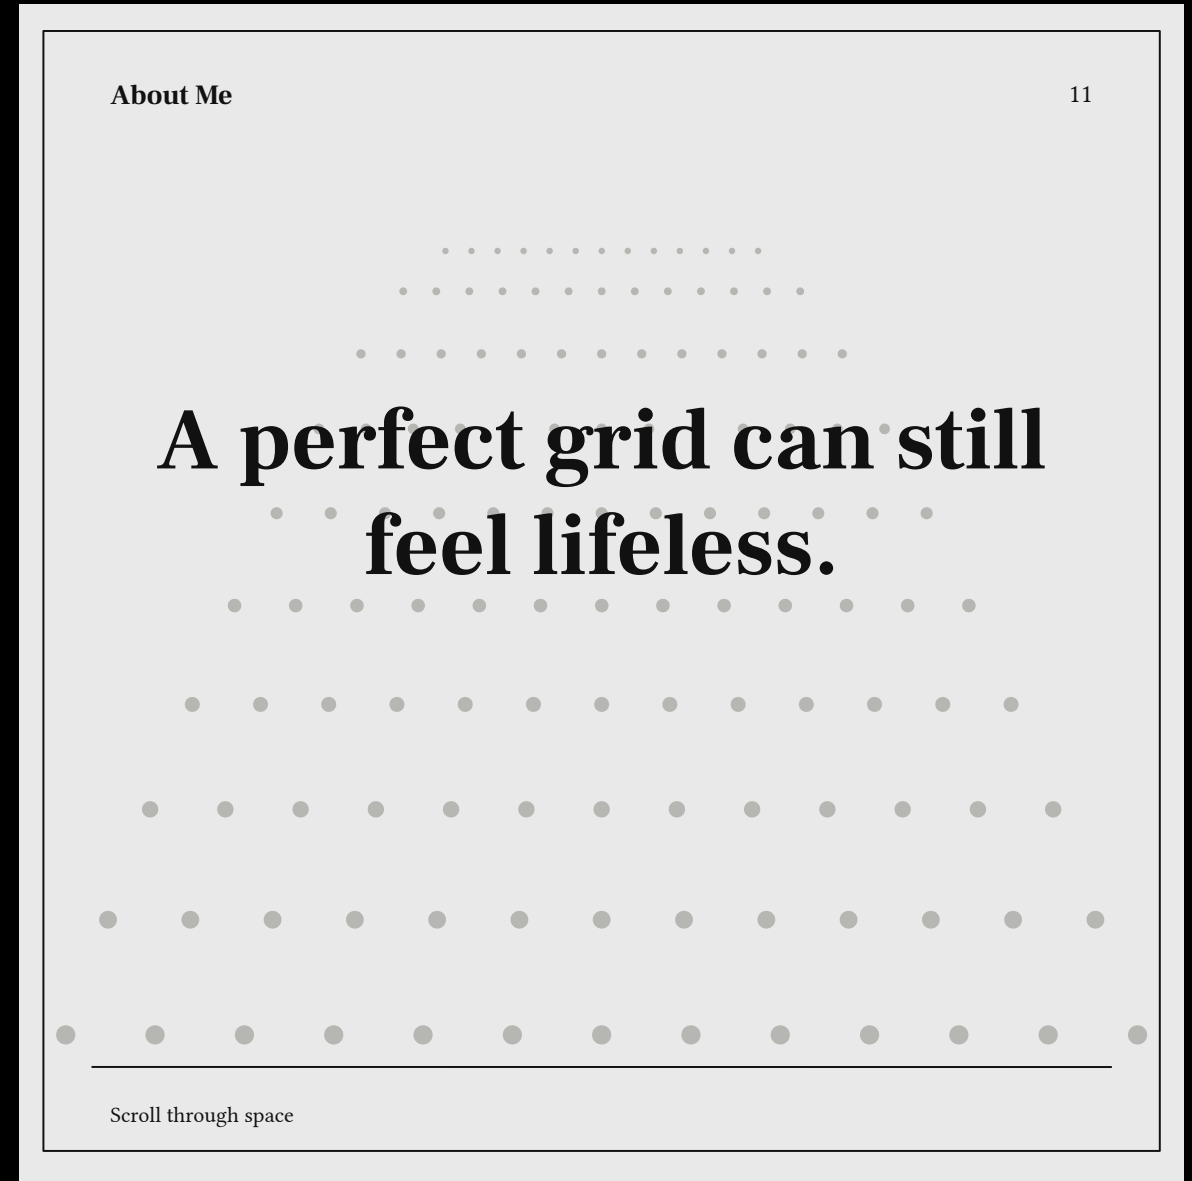

The grid remains visible, but its behaviour changes. The phrase travels through the same centre plane as the opening titles.

11 — The deliberate pause

Spatial title

The background becomes perfectly still. The absence of motion makes the conceptual turn legible without visual theatrics in the text.

12 — Explain the method

Prose + outline list

The method is readable as a paragraph, while four short proof points sit in one quiet outlined stack beside it.

About Me12

Prototypes let me test what brings it back: how an interaction responds, how motion guides attention, how a system holds together, and how a brand feels when someone actually uses it.

13 — Give the system a pulse

Spatial title

A single pulse propagates through the grid. The title remains black and centred; the colour belongs to the moving field behind it.

14 — Leave room to explore

Prose + artefacts

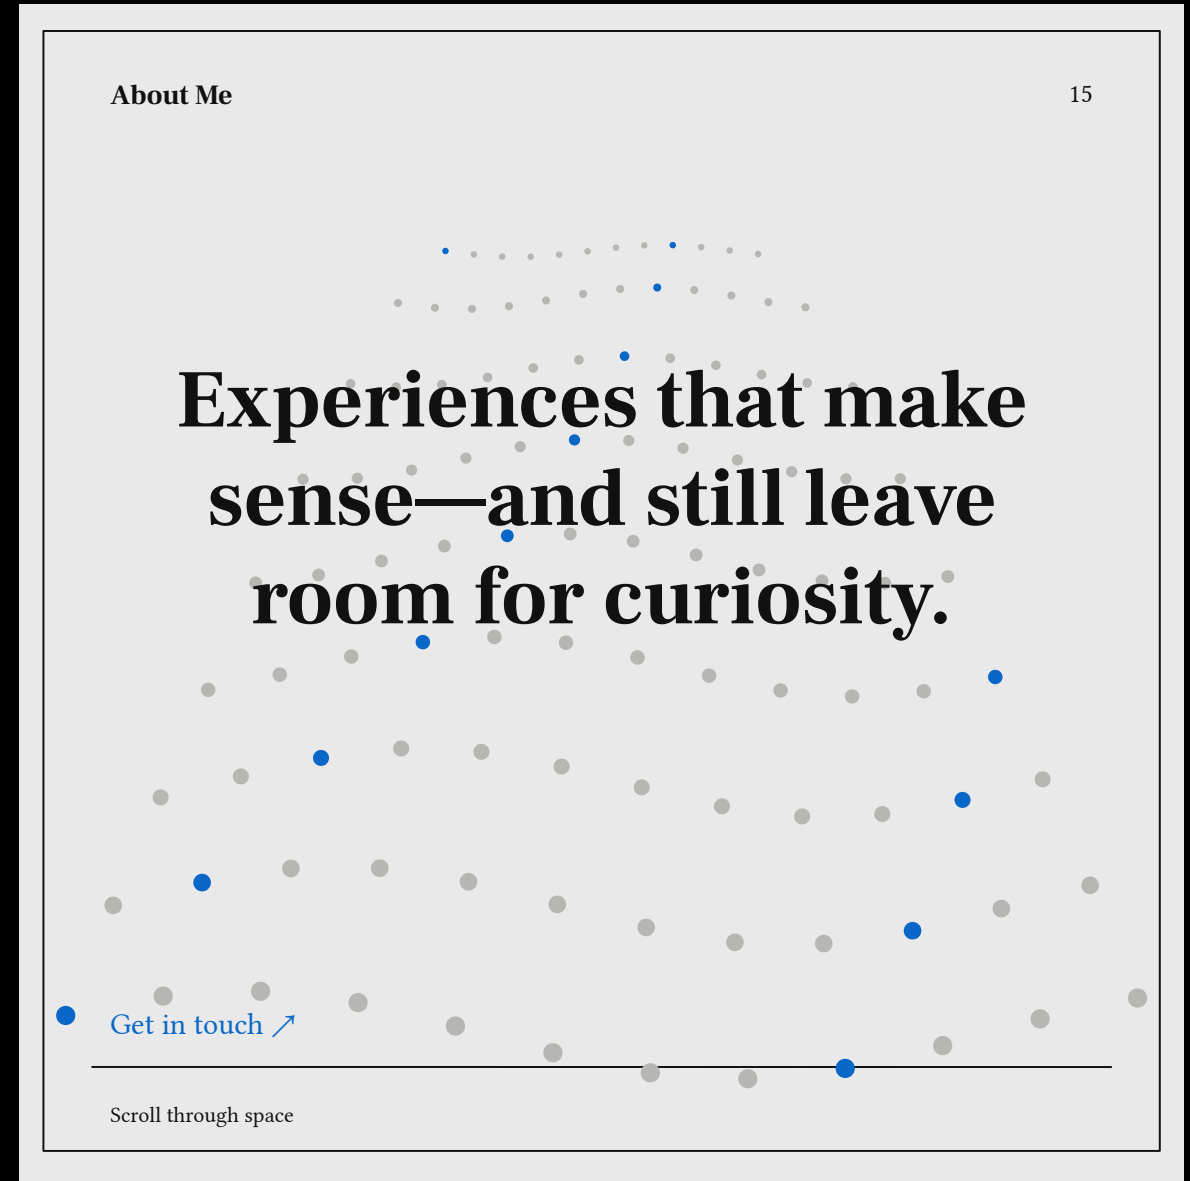

The final reading pause states the aspiration. Small experiments collect at the edge and remain optional to open or drag.

15 — Close in open space

Spatial title

The field is ordered but alive. The final sentence holds centrally, then the background continues moving after the reader reaches the end.
